The International Society for the Study of Narrative

The International Society for the Study of Narrative is a nonprofit association of scholars dedicated to the investigation of narrative; its elements, techniques, and forms; its relations to other modes of discourse; and its power and influence in cultures past and present.

'Narrative' for us is a category that includes the novel, epic poetry, history, biography, autobiography, film, the graphic arts, music, performance, legal writing, medical case histories, and more.

The Society sponsors the International Conference on Narrative each year. The first conference was held at The Ohio State University in 1986, and in subsequent years, the meeting has been held at sites across North America and Europe. At each conference, approximately 300 speakers address issues of narrative from a variety of positions and perspectives.

There are currently approximately a thousand members in ISSN, and new members are always welcome. Membership in the Society includes a subscription to Narrative (winner of the 1993 award for Best New Journal from the Council of Editors of Learned Journals), as well as to the Society's newsletter, which contains information about the annual conference, MLA sessions, the online discussion group, and other activities. For more information about the ISSN, please visit our web site at: <http://narrative.georgetown.edu>.

Keynote Speakers

CATHERINE BELSEY

Catherine Belsey is Professor of English at Swansea University. Her most recent book is A Future for Criticism (2011) Published in the Blackwell Manifesto series, this book puts forward the case for an increased attention to the pleasures of fiction and the way it engages readers. Her other books include Critical Practice (1980, 2002), Poststructuralism: A Very Short Introduction (2002), Shakespeare in Theory and Practice (2008), Why Shakespeare? (2007), Culture and the Real (2005), Shakespeare and the Loss of Eden (1999), Desire: Love Stories in Western Culture (1994), John Milton: Language, Gender, Power (1988) and The Subject of Tragedy (1985).

‘Narrative Magic’

Narrative has a special power to enlist the desire of the reader or auditor. But because the story must end, it also issues in sadness, a regret that we must eventually relinquish the world we have seemed to inhabit. In the meantime, fictional narrative shows what the magic of the signifier can do to allay desire when language is set free from responsibility to reality. Since it is explicitly ungrounded, fiction is entitled to denominate worlds beyond reach, unfamiliar, uncertain, unaccountable, alternatives to what we know: stories name possibilities, aspirations and fears. Fictional narratives can in consequence throw into relief the limitations of orthodoxy — or historical orthodoxies.

Keynote Speakers

DIANE NEGRA

Diane Negra is Professor of Film Studies and Screen Culture and Head of Film Studies at University College Dublin. She is the author, editor or co-editor of seven books: Off-White Hollywood: American Culture and Ethnic Female Stardom (2001), A Feminist Reader in Early Cinema (2002); The Irish in Us: Irishness, Performativity and Popular Culture (2006); Interrogating Postfeminism: Gender and the Politics of Popular Culture (2007); What a Girl Wants?: Fantasizing the Reclamation of Self in Postfeminism (2008); Old and New Media After Katrina (2010); and In the Limelight and Under the Microscope: Forms and Functions of Female Celebrity (2011).

‘Gendering the Recession’

After a decade and a half of frenetic economic activity in the West now often remembered as a boom period, the semi-collapse of the global financial system in 2007–2008 inaugurated a set of profound cultural shifts. While we may identify particular trends, the post-boom period is a complex one, involving competing discourses of anger, nostalgia, denial and loss. These discourses are in turn complexly gendered, mediating shifting patterns of male employment through longstanding associations between consumption, mass culture and femininity. The conjunction of women’s increasing legal, educational and economic assertiveness on one hand, and the availability of cheap female labor on the other ensures that economic change is repeatedly framed in terms of shifting gender norms. Standard accounts of economic decline frequently privilege male subjectivity (through such buzzwords as ‘mancession,’ invitations to ‘man up,’ and laments about ‘the end of men’) and it is instructive to consider how recession renews long-established tropes of masculinity in ‘crisis’ (of which feminist scholars have rightly been sceptical).

In this talk I turn to some of the most taken-for-granted popular culture forms to root an analysis of everyday recessionary culture and a preliminary mapping of what cultural geographer Ruth Wilson Gilmore would term an ‘infrastructure of feeling.’ I examine how patterns of intense wealth concentration and the transfer of risk from cultural and financial elites to the public at large (and particularly to those at lower income levels) interact with and impact cultural conceptualizations of both femininity and masculinity. Examining media forms as diverse as reality television, financial journalism, lifestyle blogs, popular cinema and advertising, I sketch a mediascape dominated by forms that trade in the repression of the socially destructive aspects of global capitalism, bid for affective normalcy, and commit themselves to strained fantasies of rejuvenated individualist enterprise, in particular demonstrating an inability to meaningfully critique the privileged male.

Keynote Speakers

NICHOLAS ROYLE

Nicholas Royle is Professor of English at the University of Sussex. He is the author of many books, including Veering: A Theory of Literature (2011), How to Read Shakespeare (2005), The Uncanny (2003), E. M. Forster (1999) and Telepathy and Literature (1990). He is co-author (with Andrew Bennett) of Elizabeth Bowen and the Dissolution of the Novel (1995) and the academic bestseller, Introduction to Literature, Criticism and Theory (4th edition, 2009). He has also published a novel, Quilt (2010).

‘Even the Title: On the State of Narrative Theory Today’

Nicholas Royle considers the state of narrative theory today, drawing on work by Jonathan Culler, Mark Currie, Brian Richardson and Lisa Zunshine, and exploring a range of literary narratives, from Joseph Conrad to contemporary writers such as Hélène Cixous, Jon McGregor, Ali Smith and David Foster Wallace. Seeking to respond to other aspects of the contemporary world (climate change, the ‘animal question’, nanotechnology and so on), he casts new light on a range of traditional terms and concepts, including point of view, omniscience, focalization, frame narrative, and voice. Royle elaborates on notions of telepathy and magical thinking, veering and the literary turn, nanotext and quick fiction, in an attempt to argue for a different way of going about narrative studies.

NOVEL

A FORUM ON FICTION

The official journal of the Society for Novel Studies

Concerned with the novel's role in engaging and shaping the world and with promoting critical discourse on the novel, Novel publishes significant work on fiction and related areas of research and theory. Issues on the early American novel, eighteenth-century fiction, and postcolonial modernisms carry on Novel's long-standing interest in the Anglo-American tradition, while an issue dedicated to the contemporary African novel demonstrates the journal's increasingly global focus.
